Teacher Gives $10,000
To Southwestern Seminary

FORT WORTH, Tex. (BP)--A Galena Park (Tex.) schoolteacher who maintained a life-long interest in Southern Baptist foreign mission work has bequeathed $10,000 to Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary.

Miss Lila Thrace Greene, who died Dec. 1, was a student at the seminary in 1922. She taught one year in the Baptist mission school in Temuco, Chile, before returning to Texas to teach in the Galena Park schools until her retirement in 1961.

On one occasion while in Chile she rode a mule in the high Andes Mountains with a group of missionaries to visit remote churches. Through the years she entertained many missionaries from Chile in her home, and when Chile was hit by an earthquake she worked with other Baptist leaders in her city to collect clothes and other necessities for those in the devastated areas.

Miss Greene was from a family of teachers. One of her brothers, Howard Greene of Southwest Texas State Teachers College in San Marcos, was one of President Johnson's teachers.

Brooks Named To Faculty At New Orleans Seminary

NEW ORLEANS, La. (BP)--James A. Brooks, a recent Th.D graduate and a teaching fellow at Princeton Theological Seminary has been named assistant professor of New Testament at New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary beginning August 1.

"A major area of intensive study for the 33 year old theologian was textual criticism," said H. Leo Eddleman, New Orleans Seminary president, who announced the appointment.

While completing doctoral study during the past three years, Brooks has been pastor of the Terrill Road Baptist Chapel, Scotch Plains, N. J. He is a graduate of Baylor University and has a B.D. degree from Southwestern Seminary.

The new seminary professor's home is El Paso, Tex. He was a Navy pilot for 4 years after graduating from college.

Brooks will be one of five New Testament professors at New Orleans Baptist Seminary. He replaces Clark Pinnock, who was recently transferred to the seminary's Christian Theology department.

Maryland Missions Head
To Direct "Metro" Program

ATLANTA (BP)-- J. N. Evans, Jr., currently directing missions for Maryland Baptists, has been chosen to head up the Southern Baptist Home Mission Board's Department of Metropolitan Missions, the program now plotting inner-city strategy and experimenting in high-rise apartment ministries.

The position has been vacant since Harold Bennett resigned about a year ago to direct the Missions Division for the Baptist General Convention of Texas.

Evans, who will assume his new responsibilities on July 1, has been Missions Secretary for the Baptist Convention of Maryland since 1961, a job he came to from several pastorates in North and South Carolina.

Although reluctant to commit himself to ideas and possible new avenues of ministry in metropolitan areas before he has studied the situation from his new vantage point, Evans strongly emphasizes that there must be development of congregational and individual resources.

"We must develop and train and give guidance to the membership of our local congregations where they themselves will be able to give some help and guidance and perform the needed ministry in the lives of people," he said. "There's no getting away from person-to-person encounter."

"We have given over this personal ministry to our paid workers--to our pastors, to our staff members," he said. "The average member does not do anything but participate in the activities that are in the confines of the church walls."

"There must be the developing of an out-going action and attitude of the people," he said.

In heavily populated communities that foster crime, juvenile delinquency, economic and social problems, the personal approach will not be an easy one, Evans said.

"In some of these high-rise apartment complexes, for example, there are families that have been living in one building for months, even years and don't know another single person," he said. "There's no feeling of responsibility as a Christian in that sort of a community."

Evans, as Director of Metropolitan Missions, will be primarily concerned with developing patterns of ministry to metropolitan areas within the older, established areas of convention work. Big cities in pioneer areas, such as New York, will remain administratively under the department of pioneer missions, which deals with areas of newer and less independent Baptist work.

(The metropolitan, pioneer, and rural-urban departments in the Board's division of missions comprise a sort of geographic distribution of work, since varying population factors require separate and distinct strategies, Hugo Culpepper, division director, said.)

Evans, a native of Knoxville, Tenn. attended the University of Tennessee and graduated from Carson-Newman College in Jefferson City, Tenn. He also holds a Master of Theology degree from Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville. From 1947 to 1961 he was pastor of the Augusta Road Baptist Church in Greenville, S. C.
